President’s Message

Last month, I had the opportunity to attend ASCD’s Leadership Conference—L2L. Also representing Pennsylvania was Executive Director, Rich Nilsen and President-elect, Jeff Taylor. Here are some highlights and thoughts from the conference:

- ASCD’s new Executive Director, Deb Delisle provided an engaging overview of the future of ASCD. Most recently, Delisle served as the U.S. Assistant Secretary of Elementary and Secondary Education. Extremely, child-centered Deb stated, “It takes courage to be a visionary leader who carries kids in your heart.” It is obvious that ASCD will continue to embrace The Whole Child platform and will continue to be a widely recognized international organization that defines, supports, and engages highly effective learning systems.

- ASCD’s Collective Mission: Prepare the student of today for a world that has yet to be created, for jobs yet to be invented, and for technologies not yet dreamed.

- Also in attendance, the Penn State Harrisburg Student Chapter. The chapter was chosen to participate in the L2L Opening Session, “I am ASCD.”

- Continuing the tradition, Pennsylvania is home to another ASCD Emerging Leader. Felix Yerace is a social studies teacher from the South Fayette School District in the Pittsburgh area. Felix credits his participation as a member of the inaugural PASCAD Emerging Leader class as a springboard to the program at the ASCD level.

The conference theme was “A Leadership Growth Mindset.” Predicated on the work of Carol Dweck, conference attendees participated in several sessions to help them reflect on and further develop a growth mindset. In a fixed mindset, people believe their basic qualities, like their intelligence or talent, are simply fixed traits. In a growth mindset, people believe that their most basic abilities can be developed through dedication and hard work—brains and talent are just the starting point. For a great video of Carol explaining the growth mindset, visit:

We left the conference re-energized by the possibilities of the growth mindset in both the organization and in our professional roles as educators.

We want digitally literate, media savvy, and globally connected learners, then we need the same in our teachers and in leadership. Dr. Jacobs will share work from her latest book to be released by ASCD this fall. She will provoke our thinking and share examples of innovative 21st century programs and practices in action from around the world.

Teacher Practice in a Connected World

Come discover the ways teachers are using power of networks to reimagine their practice, connect their students to mentors, and find relevant audience for student work. How would your practice change if you shared your work with the teacher across the hall or across the country? Explore the ways your students can be an active member of a global society and economy.

Now more than ever, educators need to be involved in the development of the policies that are having an increased and direct impact on their day-to-day professional responsibilities. In this new political environment, advocacy can no longer be viewed as a luxury or an add-on for educators but a necessity. The expertise educators can and must share with decision makers at all levels is an empowering form of leadership and vital for establishing the policies that will best support students, teachers, and schools.

Regional Update
Northeast Region Update

Ann Way Ed.D.

The Northeast Association of Supervision and Curriculum Development (NEPASCD) recently concluded the 2014 – 2015 slate of activities. The highlight of the year was the Transition to Teaching Workshop hosted by NEPASCD at Wilkes University in March. In June, NEPASCD conducted the election of officers for the 2015 - 2017 term. Online elections were held to enable all members of NEPASCD the opportunity to vote. The officers and executive board will meet in late August/early September to develop the meeting schedule, slate of events, and budget for the 2015 – 2016 year. In the upcoming year, the NEPASCD leadership will continue to discuss ways in which the organization can better meet membership needs.

Curriculum Committee Update

A Positive Spin on PSSA Results
Laurie Heinricher
Co-Chair of the Curriculum Committee

This time of year is fraught with the excitement for the start of a new school year and the anticipation of the reaction to the most recent PSSA scores. I challenge my colleagues across the Commonwealth to take the data from our first attempt at PA Core aligned PSSA tests and use the information for improvement. Yes, take those lemons and make the most delightful lemonade your teachers have ever tasted.

First, don’t panic! Not to sound extremely cliché, but we are all in the same boat. When we began getting emails from PDE and our Intermediate Units during the weeks prior to the scores being released, we should have prepared ourselves for the worst. But, we are educators who are striving for the best for our students. Anything short of how we performed in previous years or of the goals we had established, is simply not acceptable. Unfortunately we find ourselves looking at scores that do not meet our expectation. Again, don’t panic… you are not alone!

Before you even start, don’t allow yourselves to be pulled into the “blame game.” We can blame our teachers, our curriculum leaders, the textbooks, the students and even PDE for the current scores. Rather than blaming one or all of the parties listed above, take a deep breath and begin engineering your district’s or your school’s pathway towards a different level success for the 2016 PSSAs.

Start by aggregating the data and complete a gap analysis. In plain English, calculate the percentages for each proficiency level and then compare that information to the state averages. Add an additional column to that spreadsheet that shows the differences between your percentages and the state percentages. In many cases your data will be higher. Celebrate those positive gaps! Then look back to the previous gap analysis information (eMetric has such a report available). Review how this year’s gaps compare to those previous years.

Once you’ve identified those areas where either your scores are higher than the state averages or your positive gaps have increased, celebrate! Use the DRC site and drill down to the assessment anchors. Identify those anchors that were either successes for a grade level or a classroom. Ask those teachers to share best practices on those anchors before they are taught this year. Set goals for those areas that were not as strong. Make plans for improvement and determine how you will measure for the success of those goals.

Ultimately we can either be down-trodden by the results or choose to use them as a learning experience. Districts who take a positive approach, sharing the gap analyses and celebrating the positive outcomes, will find even greater success for the coming year. So yes, take the lemons. Acknowledge the rotten ones. Plan for them while making sweet lemonade from the successes and toast your teachers who worked extremely hard to prepare the students and only want to help create for the coming year!
